Beach, the business place of A. C. Frost, the store of Hawley & Fitzgerald, the Globe and the Churchill. We are inclined to the belief that, before many years pass, most of the business blocks will be heated with steam, as it will be cheaper and safer. At present every store and office has its own heating apparatus in the shape of coal or wood stoves, and it certainly must be a great deal more expensive to go it alone, than it would be for the residents of a whole block to unite and heat by steam. One good sized boiler ought to supply steam enough to heat three or four stores and a number of offices and not cost much more than is required for a furnace to heat one store.
